Why do you need people to try out tests ?

When publishing companies develop new testing materials, they need people throughout the country to try them out in order to gather normative data.

What would I have to do?

Some projects consist of actual tests (achievement, cognitive, developmental) given one-on-one by a qualified examiner.

Other projects involve completing questionnaires or providing information in an interview about the development or behavior of someone you know well.

How much do they pay?

Pay per project varies; however, the typical pay is about $10 an hour. There are projects that pay $30 for an hour. When picked to do a test, the pay will be discussed specifically.

Where would I do the testing?

The testing will take place at a time and location convenient for you. Options available include Tracy Larson's private office at 165 E. Union St., Newark, a public library, or other mutually agreed on location.

Call, fax, mail, or e-mail the information today to be added to my volunteer list!
